The Grub-ſtreet Journal. NUMB. 174.

Thursday, APRIL 26. 1733.

A continuation of the Short hiſtorical account, begun in our 172d Journal.

SECT. VI. In the midſt of Lincoln's-inn fields there had been placed almoſt daily, for ſeveral years, a kind of large, old ſquare table; upon which refuſe books, of the paſt and preſent age, were continually expoſed to ſale. Upon this altar, ſacred to the goddeſs DULLNESS, all the fore-mentioned offerings being layed in proper order, formed a lofty pyramid. The London Journals, as works of the greateſt gravity, were placed as the foundation: next to theſe lay the tragedies and comedies of KIBERUS: the third ſtory conſiſted of Daily Courants; the fourth of ſome miſcellaneous Craftſ-men, Fog's, and Grub-ſtreet Journals; the fifth and uppermoſt of Hyp-doctors and New-years Odes, placed neareſt to the clouds, as being written equally in the unintelligible ſublime, the one in proſe, and the other in verſe. PUFFERUS, dreſs'd in his pontificalibus, with an Hyp-doctor extraordinary in his hand, which he had lighted at a dark lanthorn, held by his ſub-deacon AMEN, ſet fire to the pile. Which, having great numbers of Hyp-oratorial puffs in the Daily Journals, artificially diſpoſed between the bundles, immediately took fire in ſeveral parts; but by reaſon of the thickneſs, ſolidity, and dampneſs of the matter, burnt very ſlowly, and obſcured the whole hemiſphere with a cloud of ſmoak. This burnt-offering was accompanied with an extempore prayer of oblation, and concluded with an exhortation proper to the occaſion. The ſweet ſavour of the offering, and the harmonious ſound of the prayer and exhortation, ſo agreeably regaled the noſes and ears of the congregation, that it layed them in a deep ſleep; from which they were at length rouſed by PUFFERUS, who with a ſtentoric voice cryed out, Depart in peace.

SECT. VII. There were many at this aſſembly, who did not think it ſo prudent to relie altogether upon the virtue of religious duties, tho' ever ſo exactly performed; the chief uſe of which, they, like moſt great politicians, believed to conſiſt in amuſing the more ignorant people. Accordingly they thought their own endeavours might be more effectual without, or at leaſt in conjunction with, the aſſiſtance of the goddeſs. Of this perſuaſion was PUFFERUS himſelf, who was a great man and honourable, and had very great dealings in various ſorts of dullneſs, of which he had vented, by oral and manual tradition, tho' not vended, as much as any man living. Even his enemies, of whom his ſuperior abilities raiſed him up many, acknowledge, that no man ever wrote or ſpoke like him. This great man, who for ſeveral years had claimed an independent archiepiſcopal, or rather patriarchal power over the worſhippers of DULLNESS, having revolved in his mind the impending danger, and maturely conſidered things paſt, preſent, and to come, iſſued out his letters mandatory, ſealed with his own ſignet, diſplaying a ſtar riſing to the meridian, with a motto moſt expreſſive of his modeſty, Ad ſumma: Inveniam viam aut faciam. In theſe he injoined all perſons, who had any veneration for the goddeſs DULLNESS, to repair to her chapel near the ſhambles in Clare-market, on wedneſday April 28. at ſeven in the evening, where, by particular encouragement, would be an Oration intirely new At the ſame time, he required them to bring each perſon a ſhilling; letting them plainly know, that whoever did not, he might ſtay without doors, and be damn'd. This anathematical excluſion without the pale of his church, was thought a little too ſevere by ſome perſons, and as liable to objection as tithes, or any proceedings in the biſhops courts, againſt which he had of late particularly inveighed. But others defended this injunction, and ſayed, that every one, who, by abridging himſelf now and then of a pipe and a pot, would not ſave a ſhilling to be layed out at Clare-market upon ſuch wholeſome meat for the ſoul, according to this faireſt way of buying with ready money, in which the ſeller could certainly afford the better pennyworths, deſerved to be damned without mercy. [To be continued.]

Mr. BAVIUS, Middle Temple, Ap. 13. 1733.

AS impartiality is the diſtinguiſhing mark of your ſociety, I doubt not of your willingneſs in favouring me with a few remarks from the theatrical world. You have in ſeveral papers publiſhed obſervations on the petit pieces which have appeared this ſeaſon on Drury-lane ſtage; and juſtly reprehended the dullneſs of their authors, and the folly of the managers. But your cenſure, I imagine, ſhould not be confined to that ſtage only, ſince the juriſdiction of your ſociety extends to all. Suffer me then to call in queſtion the conduct of the maſter of C—v—t Garden theatre, in reſpect to a little piece I ſaw this day advertiſed, called the Mock-Lawyer.

Mr. R——, at the beginning of this ſeaſon, was offered a tragedy by a gentleman who has obtained ſome reputation in the literary world. He allow'd there was in it a good ſtile; and that the paſſions were well mov'd; yet without alterations he would not play it, nor with alterations, unleſs he dictated them. Few men of any learning would conſent to have their labours curtail'd by a man who never made the leaſt pretence to any. I allow him the accompliſhment of a Harlequin; but the agility of his heels adds not to the judgment of his head. The gentleman choſe rather to let his deſign of bringing his piece on the ſtage drop, than to have it damn'd there, when it was brought on.

A comedy was offer'd likewiſe, recommended, as I have been inform'd, by perſons eminent for their quality and knowledge in polite learning. The dialogue, Mr. R—— own'd, was eaſy and genteel, the characters new, and drawn from life; yet it was not ſuited to Mr. R——'s peculiarity of taſte, and therefore abſolutely rejected. — Mr. VOLTAIRE's Zaira, tranſlated by a gentleman, whoſe poetical performances have ever been well receiv'd by the town, met the ſame fate. —— The town may judge from Mr. R——'s own confeſſion, how agreeable entertainments they have loſt in the two firſt mentioned pieces; and Mr. VOLTAIRE's Zaira might have been as well received on the Engliſh, as it had been on the French ſtage. — Such are the pieces he rejected: let us now examine, what he has brought on his ſtage.

Achilles ſucceeded beyond expectation, and if I may ſpeak my opinion, beyond its deſert. King LOG's Fatal Secret followed that, and met with the reception it juſtly merited. I now come to the favourite farce of the Mock-Lawyer, to make way for which, Zaira was thought of too little conſequence to appear. Mr. R—— I am told, has ſhewn a particular fondneſs for this ſing-ſong affair, and and its author; crying up the humour of the piece, the ſmartneſs of the ſongs, preferring it to one of the fineſt tragedies that this age has produced, and unuſually giving the author the benefit of the firſt night. I have very diligently enquired after this farce, and have now got information concerning the whole.

The author of the tragedy firſt mentioned had a little humourous piece ſurreptitiouſly taken from him. From this Mr. R—— got a whole opera to be work'd up by a young gentleman of Cambridge: which opera is now contracted into this farce. How ungenerous was this in Mr. R— to deny a gentleman's tragedy, and yet (unknown to him) to work on a plan of his humour; deſigning the benefit to a man who had but little title to it? I cannot reflect on the young gentleman he employ'd, as it was Mr. R—'s propoſal to him, and as he was not acquainted how he came by it. I ſhould be unwilling to cenſure the piece itſelf, as the author is ſaid to have ſome wit and learning. Yet, let me tell him, he ſets out but ill for reputation, in being concerned in a pirated plan; and may hope but ſmall ſucceſs in attacking thoſe dangerous critics of the inns of court; which I'm aſſur'd he does, both as to their poetical and law capacities.

But to return to the maſter of the theatre, let the town judge, if this man deſerves their encouragement: let authors conſider, if this is the man, who is to be apply'd to, or even truſted with their performances. The managers of the Old Houſe have behav'd ill; the maſter of the New worſe: if the firſt have brought bad pieces on the ſtage, it was becauſe they had no better; yet they rejected not a Zaira, nor pirated a copy.

I am, Sir, yours,

NO-BODY.

P. S. Sir, as this relates to every man's property, as an author, favour it with a place in your next.

To the right honourable ——————

The humble petition of Mr. PILLOW of Snore-caſtle, in the county of Bedford.

Sheweth,

THAT your petitioner and his anceſtors (as appears from the frequent conſultations which the moſt learned men have held with them) have in all ages and nations been in very high repute for their profound wiſdom, and univerſally acknowledged maſters of all arts and ſciences: that this extenſive knowledge has not in them, as in other people, been confin'd to particular perſons, but been hereditary in the family, and entail'd upon all their poſterity: that, tho' there is no part of learning, or branch of trade, which they have not been converſant in, yet (a thing which very rarely happens) they have been as communicative, as wiſe: that they have been ſingularly uſeful to perſons of both ſexes, and of all ranks and qualities, who have conſtantly conſulted them, and made them privy to their moſt momentous affairs; a truſt which they have ever diſcharged with the utmoſt ſecreſy and fidelity: that a lover has ſeldom dar'd to ask his miſtreſs the queſtion, or a lady preſumed to declare her final reſolution, till They had firſt weigh'd the queſtion, and conſented to the anſwer: that a ſhip of war has ſcarce ever been built, or an act of parliament paſs'd, but they have had an hand in contriving both: that they have given vaſt aſſiſtance to generals in conducting war, and to ſtateſmen (as yourſelf very well know) in ſettling the conditions of peace: and that even kings themſelves have ſeldom ventur'd either to ſend an embaſſy abroad, or make a ſpeech from their thrones at home, till the matter both of the embaſſy and ſpeech had been firſt ſubmitted to their judgment, and received their approbation. In conſideration therefore of ſo many important ſervices, from himſelf and his anceſtors, your petitioner flatters himſelf he has ſome colour of reaſon to aſpire to the dignity of a right honourable, and humbly begs your intereſt, that he may be conſtituted and appointed a privy-councellor in this kingdom, and that he may have leave for the future to take his place at the board accordingly.

And your petitioner, to whatever you ſhall think fit to preſs upon him, will ever yield.

Some ſay, (if their teſtimony may be depended upon) that when this petition was preſented, —————— paid ſo great regard to it, that he honour'd the petitioner with a long private conference that very night; but, as ſome ſcurrilous tongues reported the next morning, that he ſlept a very conſiderable part of the time, the petition was rejected, leaſt the ſame reflection ſhould, by ſcandalous and malicious people, be caſt upon the privy-councellors in general, (even when aſſembled upon the moſt important occaſions) in caſe the petitioner ſhould be admitted to take his place at the board.

But others indeed affirm, that the petition was refuſed, becauſe it was plainly proved by ſeveral credible witneſſes, that the petitioner's pretenſions to wiſdom were falſe and groundleſs, and that both he and his whole family have for time out of mind really had the ſofteſt heads of any perſons in the kingdom.

THE FORTUNATE DISAPPOINTMENT,

I.

CLELIA, what other nymph beſide
That myſtic power cou'd ever boaſt?
For you, tho' balk'd of being a bride,
Still keep that bleſſing which you loſt.

II.

Your own deſerted happy charms,
A faithleſs lover's place ſupply:
Tho' wanting MAGIC in your arms,
You ſtill have magic in your eye.

III.

From his ſoft chain the ſlave releaſe,
Whom youth and beauty cannot hold;
And while the gay and young you pleaſe,
Let dowds make conqueſts of the old.

IV.

Let thy diſdain the woman prove,
Inflame thy look, and arm thy eyes:
Where 'tis a crime for maids to love,
'Tis ſure a virtue to deſpiſe.

V.

The pouting lip, the breaſts that pant,
The cheek in tears, and head in pain,
Are never view'd, but when you want
Some bleſſing which you cannot gain.

567

VI.

Let no ſtiff formal ſaint prevail,
A nymph ſo orthodox to wed;
But oh! within the church's pale,
Chuſe to reſign thy maiden-head.

VII.

For CLELIA! ſure that virgin face
Is much too lovely, and too fair,
To wait each night a tedious grace,
Or long extemporary prayer.

VIII.

Thoſe ſnowy marble breaſts were given,
That heavenly boſom was beſtow'd,
Thoſe ſeats of bliſs, that lover's heaven,
To bear a weight, but not a load.

IX.

How had thy bloom with him decay'd,
For ever teiz'd, and baulk'd beſide!
Better to die a ſpotleſs maid,
Than live a kind of virgin-bride.

From the PEGASUS in Grub-street.

WE hear that by a conference held at Scarborough the last summer between a convocation of ladies of the church of England, and a grand meeting of young female quakers assembled there from several parts of the kingdom, all unhappy differences in religion were in a fair way of being amicably adjusted; that the ladies (in order to inform themselves more perfectly of the true state of the controversy) met almost every sunday at the quaker's meeting: and, as a further testimony of their great impartiality and moderation, condescended to appear in the most public places in night-gowns, mobs, and white aprons: that, on the other side, the young quakers (not to be behind-hand with them in their overtures for an accommodation) advanced to short cloaks, velvet hoods, powder, and patches: that such large steps towards a reconciliation afford great hopes, that the next sessions of this religious parliament (which it is expected will be held at the same place this approaching summer) will be concluded with a firm and intire union between them; it being believed by many (who observed the conduct of several ladies, and some quakers) that if the grand article of dress is once agreed upon, and establish'd, the less important ones of faith and worship will not occasion any great disputes. It is not doubted but the young gentlemen of both parties will soon join in becoming converts to the new religion; arguments, when proceeding from a pretty mouth, being generally acknowledged by those logicians, unanswerable and irresistable.

A SONG.

FLY no more, cruel fair, but be kind and relenting,
Enough has been shewn of contempt and disdain;
Taste at length the superior delight of consenting,
For 'tis much nobler joy to give pleasure than pain.

II.

Wou'd you charm men of sence, and engage their addresses;
My CLOE, of pride, as of painting beware:
For beauty consists more in minds than in faces,
And the maid's almost ugly, that only is fair.

THE Hypochondriacal Daily Advertiser and puffer, has in vain endeavoured, for above these two years, to raise a neglected paper, by undertaking the defence of any thing, whether true or false, rational or irrational; which it must be acknowledged he has performed with equal ingenuity and learning, writing equally intelligibly upon all sorts of subjects. This sublime doctor has thought proper to add to his Hyp puff in the Daily Journal of Ap. 20. a N. B. in vindication of his oratorical brother the Free Briton, betwixt whom and Mr. MÆVIUS, he, with equal modesty and truth, affirms the question to be, "Whether a "member of P————t can apply a copy of a money-"bill, depending, to any other but his own private use?" a question not proposed by the Free Briton, and expressly disclaimed by Mr. MÆVIUS; who undertook only to shew, "that notwithstanding any thing He had advanced to the "contrary, there was nothing illegal or improper in the "proceedings of the common council." —— This great doctor, to prove himself as learned a Linguist, as Civilian, adds, "The Free Briton is right in his Civil Law, for "tabula publica is any writing of the senatorial or parlia "mentary proceedings by authority." But Mr. MÆVIUS desires the doctor to shew by what authority he asserts this; and to produce one single instance, from any good ancient author, in which tabula publica, in the singular number, has that signification.

Great Linguist, hang out this publica tabula,
Or stand forth expos'd as a publica fabula.

A Resolution has passed in our society, that we will not publish any account, or part of any piece, by way of specimen, unless we shall have first read the whole: which resolution hindered the publication of Mr. SOMEBODY's last letter.

We are informed, that a full Reply to a letter, published in two late news-papers, in defence of the intended edition of STEPHENS's Thesaurus, will very soon be layed before us; containing a particular answer to every thing alledged by the Editors in vindication of themselves, against some Reflections in two of our late Journals.

POLYMINA: Or, The Charms of MUSICK. Being an Ode sacred to Harmony; occasion'd by Mr. Handel's ORATORIA, and the HARMONIA SACRA, perform'd at Whitehall by the Gentlemen of the Chapel-Royal; dedicated to Mr. HANDEL.

Nor Fame I slight, nor for her Favours call;
She comes unlook'd-for, if she comes at all.
O let me still the secret Joy partake,
To follow Virtue ev'n for Virtue's sake.
Tho' living Virtue is with Envy curst,
And the best Men are treated like the worst.
Unblemish'd let me live, or die unknown,
O grant an honest Fame, or grant me none. A. POPE.

Notice is hereby given,

THAT the Great and wonderful Cures daily perform'd by Dr. BATEMAN's Pectoral-Drops, in the following Diſtempers, have gained them ſo indiſputable a Character, that few Families, who have ever heard, or experienced the Virtues thereof, care to be without them in their own Houſes, viz. the Gout, Rheumatiſm, Jaundice, Flux, Stone, Gravel, Aſthmas, and Cholicks, of what Kind or Nature ſoever, whether proceeding from Wind, Cold, or Hyſterick Affection. Beſides which there is no one Secret in the whole Art of Phyſick of that ſurprizing, and (were it not under the Confirmation of continual Experience) almoſt incredible Effects in Colds, Agues, Fevers, and thoſe epidemic Evils which appear in moſt Conſtitutions at Spring and Fall. The Price of each Bottle, in which there are three Doſes, being but one Shilling. Sold by Virtue of the King's Letters Patent, granted to Benjamin Okell, and the Perſons concerned with him, viz. William Dicey, Printer at Northampton: Thomas Cobb, (in Right of Elizabeth his Wife) late Widow of Mr. John Cluer, at the Printing-Office, Bow-Church-Yard, Cheapſide; and Robert Raikes.

N. B. A Book of the Virtues thereof, with Teſtimonies of ſome Hundreds of Cures performed thereby, under the Hands of Perſons of known Worth and Credit, may be had gratis at Dr. Bateman's Warehouſe in Bow-Church-Yard, London.

☞ 'Tis obſervable, that theſe Drops are Diaphoretic, Diuretic, and Cardiac, containing in themſelves all thoſe three ſeveral Qualities, is the Reaſon why they effect (with the Bleſſing of God) ſo many Cures in the preſent raging Colds, Pains in the Limbs, &c.
